In September 1952, a highly contrasting cocker spaniel named Checkers accidentally spared the political existence of then Republican Vice Presidential Candidate Richard Nixon. In the wake of being blamed for shamefulnesses identifying with a mystery political reserve, Nixon announced on national TV that he had been given Checkers by one of his sponsor. In a stroke of political virtuoso, Nixon pulled at the heartstrings of more than sixty million American watchers by including "the children, similar to all children, love the canine and I simply need to state this at the present time, that paying little respect to what they state about it, we are going to keep him." This location by Nixon would end up known as "the Checkers discourse". dog flags for house

At the season of the discourse, Checkers was moderately new to the Nixon family as the little dog had been displayed to the Nixons in August 1952. Nixon could be excused for not realizing the young doggie well, anyway this did not prevent one political observer from pointing out that Nixon had erroneously alluded to Checkers in his discourse as male; the suggestion being Checkers, a female, was of no genuine significance to Nixon. Notwithstanding, a look on the web uncovers photos of Nixon playing with Checkers.

Checkers was brought into the world in unremarkable conditions. Furthermore, presumably would have driven an unremarkable life were it not for her raid into the White House. Notwithstanding Checkers' reputation, Cocker Spaniels are a well known breed - in the United Kingdom it is positioned second in fame, after the Labrador Retriever.

Cocker Spaniels are moderately simple to prepare as they are anxious to please - they are a decent decision for the beginner hound proprietor. Albeit lively, friendly and social essentially, they make great guard dogs as they will bark at outsiders.

Cocker Spaniels have a place with the firearm mutts or donning gathering, and nearby Setters and Retrievers, make extraordinary seekers and family pets. The Cocker Spaniel helps its chasing accomplice (proprietor) by following, flushing and recovering game.

Cocker Spaniels coats are velvety and extend in shading from pastel dark colored to dark. Normal brushing is required.

The future of a Cocker Spaniel is around 10-14 years. Checkers, destined to a dam named Boots and sired by Ace, kicked the bucket in 1964 (matured 12) and is covered underneath a rock headstone (fixed with little American banners left by guests) at Long Island's Bide-a-Wee Pet Cemetery. A little topiary remembrance of Checkers is situated at the Richard Nixon Library in California.
